

Honduran Youth Activist's Special Report Non-violent Resistance to the Honduras Coup Regime

Gerardo Torres

Since the June 28, 2009, military coup in Honduras and the kidnapping of democratically-elected President Manuel Zelaya, Gerardo Torres has immersed himself in all levels of the FNRP, the Frente Nacional de Resistencia Popular.

Gerardo comes to us following his appearance at the Latin America Solidarity Coalition national conference in Washington DC. The objective of the conference, held from April 8-10, is to build a movement to end US militarism and the militarization of relations with Latin America.

As a leader of the non-violent resistance movement, Gerardo is able to present an eye-witness account of the ongoing repression that is escalating in its intensity. He will discuss how the coup was actually a catalyst for uniting various segments of society, such as students and youth, landless peasants, union workers, teachers, artists, gays and lesbians, into a massive popular resistance movement, which fosters the people's dream to "refound the State" based on justice and equality.
